WHAT IS NEW IN EAST LANSING?

New Faculty
As of August 2019, the MAFLT has a new professor! Dr. Haixia Liu comes from China and just finished her PhD in Educational Technology. We are hiring in 2020 also. That call will go out this fall.

New Assistant
This fall we are also fortunate to have new graduate assistants in CeLTA. Isaac Sarver is working on his MA in Linguistics on campus, and he is enthusiastic about helping faculty and students in the MAFLT.

New Certificate
We have been talking about adding a “mini-MAFLT” certificate for years, and we hope to make it a reality soon. Primarily it will allow teachers with MA degrees already to add it. 10 credits = 3 courses + portfolio.

New Facility
If you visit us on campus, you will notice a brand-new facility across the road next to the MSU stadium. It will be dedicated to STEM education, and it is inspiring us to look at FLT-STEM connections.

CeLTA Mission Statement
As a locally grounded and internationally minded hub for language education transformation, our mission is to empower language educators, engage language learners, and enhance language learning and teaching practices through innovation, research, advocacy, and professional development.

Interview with Dr. Haixia Liu

Dr. Liu answered these interview questions for the newsletter in November 2019.

What languages do you speak, and how did you learn them?

Chinese is my native tongue. English is my second language, and I started learning English in middle school. When I went to college, I needed to choose another foreign language as a student whose major is English Language & Culture. So I chose Japanese.

What were you doing before you joined the MAFLT?

I came to US in the summer of 2014 to pursue a PhD degree. I joined the MAFLT in the Fall 2019. In the summer of 2019, I was at the last stage of my PhD study, defending my dissertation and making revisions based on the committee’s suggestions. I was also helping with FLT 807 as a course assistant.

What did you focus on in your PhD, especially in your dissertation?

My PhD study focused on foreign language teachers’ technology use, such as the barriers they are perceiving in their teaching, their innovative use of technology, etc. My dissertation was a survey-based study that used the Theory of Planned Behavior (TPB) as the theoretical framework. It examined foreign language teachers’ intentions to use technology for student-centered learning.

What do you think the MAFLT can do better?

The MAFLT is a fully online program, and most courses are offered asynchronously. This is a great advantage to MAFLT students who are busy and in different time zones. However, the interaction and collaboration among MAFLT students and faculty need to be and can be further strengthened. We already have the MAFLT Community on D2L, but I think our next step is to further develop the community to promote more interactions and also facilitate future collaboration among students.

What have you learned since you started teaching in the MAFLT?

I have learned many things from the faculty in CeLTA, but the person that I have learned most from is Dr. Lanier. By observing how she organizes FLT 807 as a course assistant, I was enlightened on designing my own course. Her detail-oriented working, patience with students, and devotion to the MAFLT program set a good model for me. I have also learned much from my students, such as in the discussion forum where my students share their experiences with using technology for their own classes.

What do you want to do next in terms of your own research and writing?

As my research interests lie in foreign language teachers’ technology use, my research plan can be in any of the following directions: 1) to continue my PhD study topic on examining foreign language teachers’ innovative technology use for better learning in different teaching contexts; 2) to work with MAFLT faculty on examining foreign language teachers’ expectations of foreign language teacher education and how to help them become more successful in their teaching environments; or 3) to work with MAFLT students on developing topics related to their interests and to collaborate in presenting at conferences and writing journal articles.

In Fall 2019, Dr. Liu is teaching FLT 807 Methods, FLT 881 Technology in FLT, and FLT 885 Experiential Modules in cooperation with Dr. Lanier.

In Spring 2020, Dr. Liu is scheduled to teach FLT 860 Foreign / Second Language Interaction, FLT 841 Special Topics: Digital Literacy, and FLT 885 Experiential Modules.
